Through the time and space of everyday life, we continually choose between what is more and less important. Some things remain vital forever, others only for the moment.